

Never let it be said that girls can't get do anything a boy can do, even while wearing a dress and fancy shoes. It had to be around midnight, meaning I had been wearing the sky blue and white polka dot dress with uncomfortable black shoes about three hours longer than I wanted but I didn't have time to change before starting work for the night. I wanted to change. The shoes pinched my toes and the dress made me all too aware of my knees. I don't know if you've ever tried to stay hidden at night while wearing sky blue, but it ain't easy.

I snapped two more photos of what was going on in the Taylor's dining room, then knelt down and slipped off my shoes. My toes thanked me. I brought the camera back up, adjusted the focus and watched as Mrs. Taylor was receiving a different kind of yoga lesson from her guru. Downward dog indeed. Three more photos, including one of a particularly chakra opening face she was making, and I heard a car slow down at the corner. This was probably Mr. Taylor coming home from work, so I scooped up my shoes and shoved myself into the hedges.
